A woman's reproductive health is a delicate and complex, ever changing system in the body. It is important to take steps to protect it from infections and injury, and prevent problems. Program faculty will discuss vital issues such as focusing on relevant history and assessment, encouraging and counseling patients on TOP TIER Methods of Birth Control, individualizing patient care with contraceptive methods, talking with patients about sexual coercion and human trafficking, discussing pregnancy options, and review of the "United States Medical Eligibility Criteria Guidelines" correlating with Public Health Protocol.

Program Objectives:

1. Discuss the health care needs of women from adolescence to the post menopausal period.
2. Distinguish between the types of contraceptives available, use and effectiveness, and how to "tailor" to each patient.
3. Define the TOP TIER Methods of Contraception and why patients should be encouraged to choose them.
4. Identify how to use the "United States Medical Eligibility Criteria" proficiently for initiating Contraceptive Methods in Public Health through the use of case studies.
5. Describe how to talk with patients about sexual coercion and human trafficking.
6. Outline the options for patients with a positive pregnancy test.
